Quarterly Commentary

Fund Review

The coronavirus pandemic and the recession-incurring restrictions to combat its rapid spread transformed the investment backdrop from benign to malignant. Over the quarter the MSCI All Country World index plunged -21.37%. The fund outperformed the index but was unable to escape heavy declines. The A-class, B-class, C-class and X-class fell -19.39%, -19.35%, -19.21% and -19.04% respectively.

No sectors and very few stocks were spared losses amidst one of the worst quarters on record for global equities. The fund benefited from steering clear of energy, which was the weakest sector as oil prices hit decade lows. The relative gains from this positioning were partially offset by heavy falls in financial holdings (particularly Banco Santander, HDFC Bank and Prudential) given the sector's sensitivity to capital markets, interest rates and bad debts. Stock selection was strongest within the communications services (Tencent) and information technology (Microsoft and Keyence) sectors. Reflecting the near-term winners and losers, it was a mixed picture within consumer discretionary. "Stay-at-home" beneficiary Amazon.com mitigated the "away-from-home" quick service restaurant exposure (Yum Brands and Starbucks).

Market Overview

The speed of events has made the prior quarter, when the fund returned over +10%, seem like another world. Today, much of the populous are isolated at home, a global recession is a certainty, and last year's stunning equity market gains have been erased in a flash.

Amidst all the market chaos the combination of a robust investment process and a strong team of in-house global sector analysts has enabled the fund to exploit opportunities thrown up by the shakeout. Hence, the quarter saw more holdings changes than usual. The fund exited several financial and consumer discretionary stocks where prior assumptions were no longer tenable amidst a completely different investment environment. The proceeds from these sales were redeployed into several new ideas that had been on our radar for months or even years, awaiting a compelling entry point.

An example is Alibaba, which was reintroduced to the fund after a two-year absence. Subsequent information eased our prior corporate governance concerns over the restructuring of its fintech business in 2018. The company owns two of China's largest e-commerce platforms (Taobao and Tmall) which collect fees from merchants for advertising and completing transactions. A virtuous circle whereby more consumers attract more merchants, and more merchants attract more consumers, has enabled Alibaba to establish a market position larger than all other e-commerce players in China put together. As well as benefiting from robust e-commerce growth, the company has broadened its addressable market to include cloud computing, payments and digital media in China.

Looking ahead

Policy makers have acted quickly on an unprecedented scale to counteract the hit resulting from government-imposed lockdowns to "flatten the curve". Unfortunately, it will not be enough to avert a sharp rise in unemployment. The greater the job losses, the lower the chances of a "V" shaped snapback in demand once the virus is eventually defeated by a vaccine, effective treatment or herd immunity. The overall market is cheap relative to cash and bonds, but not enough of a bargain relative to historical average valuations to warrant aggressively upping exposure to equities at this stage. A lengthy recession scenario has not been fully discounted, and the macro data will likely become far worse before improving. Over the longer term, given our quality focus and having re-examined all our stock-specific investment theses, we have a high level of confidence in the sustainability of the companies held in the fund, and in their underlying earnings power to deliver superior compound returns to shareholders who are prepared to stay the course.
