Based on period from:	01/10/2023	01/10/2023
Total Expense	1.03%	0.83%
Transaction Costs	0.00%	0.00%
Total Investment Charge	1.03%	0.83%
1 Year Total Expense	1.03%	0.83%

Total Expense (TER): This ratio shows the charges, levies and fees relating to the management of the portfolio and is expressed as a percentage of the average net asset value of the portfolio, calculated over the period shown and annualised to the most recently completed quarter. A higher TER does not necessarily imply a poor return, nor does a low TER imply a good return. The current TER should not be regarded as an indication of future TERs.
Transaction Costs (TC): This ratio shows the percentage of the value of the fund incurred as costs relating to the buying and selling of the fund's underlying assets. TC are a necessary cost in administering the fund and impacts fund returns. It should not be considered in isolation as returns may be impacted by many other factors over time including market returns, the type of fund, investment decisions of the investment manager and the TER.
Total Investment Charges (TIC): This ratio is simply the sum of the TER and TC, showing the percentage of the value of the fund incurred as costs relating to the investment of the fund. It should be noted that performance figures account for all costs included in the TIC ratio, so you should not deduct the TIC from performance figures, the performance is already net of the TIC.

The Fund delivered a positive return over the quarter, although underperformed the cash benchmark.

Market overview

The third quarter's surge in the oil price has again heightened inflationary concerns, pushing global government bond yields to fresh multi-year highs with the US treasury 10-year yield breaching the key resistance level of 5% for the first time since 2007. Forecasting over the short-term remains incredibly difficult as the ongoing war in Iran and intrinsically linked moves in the oil price remain highly unpredictable, at best. Many major central banks have been forced to respond to markedly higher energy prices with tighter monetary policy, notably the US Federal Reserve (Fed) and the European Central Bank (ECB), the latter of which has now hiked by a total of 50 basis points since June. Although we have our doubts that higher interest rates will do little to move the dial on the oil price. Despite the current 'inflation angst', the market's longer-term outlook remains more positive with US five-year inflation expectations below 2.5% and the oil futures curve in backwardation (downward sloping) suggesting a retracement to roughly $80 a barrel a year from now. Time will tell if either are correct, if they are then yields at current levels are becoming increasingly attractive on a medium to long-term outlook, even if economic growth remains strong.

Looking ahead

As widely expected, the US Federal Reserve (Fed) raised interest rates in September by 0.25% to 4% (upper bound). History suggests Fed tightening cycles are almost never 'one and done' so a further hike, probably in December, appears highly likely although currently we expect this hiking cycle to be fairly shallow. Ongoing evidence of US economic resilience is reinforcing the view that current monetary policy has not been sufficiently restrictive and with hindsight, the 0.75% of easing in 2025 was premature, particularly as inflation has remained stubbornly above the Fed's target rate for over five years. Fundamentally, the unemployment rate remains low, and 'nominal' GDP hasn't been much higher since the 1980's (excluding the post-COVID rebound). Recently appointed Fed Chair Warsh has made it clear that inflation is top of his agenda and stipulated that the target rate is not changing – hawkish comments that seal the deal for tighter monetary policy. However, higher interest rates do not necessarily have to translate into much higher government bond yields as this year's spike in ten-year yields (over 100 basis points since late February) has arguably 'priced-in' a lot of rate and inflation/oil price uncertainty. Counterintuitively, raising interest rates is probably the best course of action to stem the rise in government bond yields (perceived as growth-negative and inflation-positive). Admittedly, while oil prices (aka inflation) have dominated the spike in government yields this year, other ongoing factors such as fiscal and debt concerns have contributed to the negative backdrop for fixed income markets and these factors together with a buoyant economy are likely to persist.
The rise in short yields intensified from late August with the 2-year benchmark yield rising circa 70 basis points in the quarter as the market repriced for a more aggressive Fed rate tightening cycle. While the manager maintained a fairly defensive duration policy, higher yields weighed on the funds performance, and whilst delivering a positive return underperformed the cash benchmark. With the 2-year US Treasury yield approaching 5% we have started to slowly increase duration on the belief that yields at current levels have already meaningfully discounted higher interest rates. However, uncertainty over a resolution to the US/Iran war and any further impact to higher energy prices may well push yields higher, which will provide an opportunity to increase duration further. The allocation to Investment Grade corporate credit has been increased while the High Yield credit exposure has been retained at 11%, and with yield spreads trading near historically low levels, we continue to wait for a more attractive opportunity to increase the exposure further.
